Homework for This Class Is New Two-Bedroom House . . . Half Built

One hour lecture and two hours of "home" work is the daily schedule for Ken Duto's carpentry class at El Camino College.

"Home" work is a two-bedroom, one-bath, wood frame house which 13 students are constructing in an area adjacent to the college carpentry shop.

The new structure is being erected in the shadow of a completed house, which was sold at public auction.

DUTO'S CREW has been working on the new house for almost a year. It is the fifth house of this type to be constructed and will be completed by June, 1962.

"This one is a little different from the last house," Duto said. It will have vinyl floors, an all-ash kitchen, and ash doors. The students do everything to complete the house, except to install the plumbing. That includes electrical hook-ups too," he added.

AFTER THE houses are completed, they are put up for auction to the general public. The bidding is closed and individuals may send in written bids. The house is awarded to the highest bidder.

"The last house sold for about $4200 and this one is expected to bring approximately $5000. Very little profit is made beyond reimbursement for construction costs," Duto commented.

A house is built once every two years, which means that a student usually completes his associate in arts degree as he completes work on the house.

"THE NEXT house to be built will be drastically different from the previous ones," Duto revealed. The art class is designing it now. Besides having three bedroom and one and one-half baths, the house will be an example of modern architecture," he continued.

"The house itself is a more excellent device for learning by doing, than by lecture. However, lectures are correlated with the actual construction so that the students will understand the theories behind building. . . .

DUTO, who has been in the trade for 20 years, has worked as a foreman, superintendent, and contractor for various firms. He has been at El Camino for two years.

Quality is stressed in all phases of construction.
